INTRODUCTION

THE number of published cuneiform tablets from Cappadocia has increased very rapidly in the last decade. The result has been that the attention of Assyriologists has been directed to the problems raised by these tablets. A people hitherto unknown to history have now to be considered in the effort to reconstruct the early history of Asia Minor. One very useful factor in the reconstruction of the history of any people is the study of their personal names. It is therefore the purpose of the present work to present for the study of scholars a complete list of the personal names found in the Cappadocian tablets, together with a glossary of the elements contained in the names.

The first attempt at collecting Cappadocian personal names was made by W. Golénischeff, in Vingt-Quatre Tablettes Cappadociennes, 1891. A more complete list of the names of the same tablets was published by F. Delitzsch in Beiträge zur Entzifferung und Erklärung der Kappadokischen Keilschrifttafeln: Abhandlung der philologisch-historischen Classe der Königlich Sächsischen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften, XIV 4. Leipzig, 1893. Dr. Georges Contenau in his Trente Tablettes Cappadociennes has collected all the names of the Cappadocian tablets which were published at that time. But the texts published since Contenau's list was made number a great many more than those which his list includes. With more material it has been possible to correct the reading of many of the names and to add new ones. The aggregate of published texts has now reached the point, however, when each new lot brings fewer new names, and less new light on the reading of old ones. Though the writer is aware that not a few Cappadocian tablets remain unpublished in the various museums of the world, it is his belief that the list here presented contains almost the entire number of personal names which were in use among the people represented by these business documents.

Attention is now directed to a few points of interest with reference to the reading and interpretation of some of the names.

THE GOD Al

JOHNS, ADB, p. 15, says that the name of a god in Harran was pronounced Al, Alla, and not Ilu, or El. The element A-li is of common occurrence in the names of the first dynasty of Babylon. To be compared with these in Cappadocian names is the very common A-lá-ḫu-um, also A-lá-bu-um, Al-be-li, and A-al-tábu. Surely the divine element in these names is Al. At the same time the names in which the divine element was El or Ilu are very numerous, as may be seen by consulting the lists. It is evident, then that all the Semites of Cappadocia did not pronounce this divine name in the same way.

THE ELEMENT EL.ŠŪ.GAL

THIS element occurs once in the name Buzur-EL.ŠŪ.GAL, where, from the analogy of other names compounded with the element Buzur, it must represent a deity. ŠŪ.GAL is a deity known in Cassite names (CPN, p. 207). El is here used in the same way as in the names El-Amurru, El-Shaddai, etc. (cf. Clay, Empire, p. 167). The Cappadocian name Ī-lī-ŠŪ.GAN is also to be compared. Weidner has shown (Boghazköi Studien, 6, p. 77, note 1) that l and n are frequently interchanged as in Nur-Dagal for Nur-Dagan. In view of this fact, and the Cappadocian use of the sign NI with the value li as often as ni, it is not impossible that they wrote ŠŪ.GAN for ŠŪ.GAL.

THE ELEMENTS BĀ.ŠĀ AND MAN

THESE two elements are very common in Cappadocian names. Ungnad showed (OLZ 24, pp. 15, 16) that each is to be read Puzur in Assyrian names. The same will hold true in Cappadocian. The spelling Buzur has been adopted in this list because of the universal use on the part of the Cappadocians of b for p. The following facts prove that the two ideograms are but variant ways of writing the same name. The name of the son of Ī-lī-a-lim is written BĀ.ŠĀ-A-na (CCT II, 47b:3), and MAN-A-na (BIN IV, 185:8). The text CCT IV, 16b, where the name BĀ.ŠĀ-Ištar and MAN-Ištar each occur several times, might lead one to suppose that they were not variant spellings of the same name (cf. CCT IV, p. 3), but further consideration must reverse the decision. The document is a letter of ŠŪ-Ištar addressed to Ga-ta-tim, BĀ.ŠĀ-Ištar and BĀ.ŠĀ-Ištar. Here we evidently have two individuals with the same name who are later distinguished and addressed separately as MAN-Ištar (line 5), and MAN-Ištar, son of Im-tī-lim (line 14). Now unless the MAN-Ištar of line 5 is identical with one of the BĀ.ŠĀ-Ištars of the formal salutation of the letter, and the MAN-Ištar of line 14 is identical with the other, those portions of the letter (line 5ff, line 14ff) are addressed to individuals not mentioned in the formal salutation, which is a procedure unparalleled in Cappadocian letters. There are, however, numerous examples of letters in which a number of individuals are named in the salutation, and then certain ones of them singled out for particular messages (e.g. CCT IV, 8b, 9b, 14a, 14b, 20a, 21a, 27b, 49a, BIN IV, 17, 20, 41, 47, 55, 57, 69, etc.). The conclusion is, then, that BĀ.ŠĀ and MAN are but variant ways of writing the same name element. There is no Cappadocian evidence for the pronunciation of the element, but it may be safely read Buzur, for Puzur in Assyrian.

THE GODS Sin AND ZU

THE God Sin is evidently spelled phonetically in Cappadocian (zu-in, zu-en) though in a few instances it is written ideographically (EN-ZU). The evidence from the Cappadocian inscriptions is not yet convincing that the God ZU, which appears rather often, is also a variant way of writing Sin. It is to be noted, however, that the father of ŠŪ-A-nim is En-na-ZU, and the son of ŠŪ-A-nim is E-na-Sin(zu-in). If it is the same ŠŪ-A-nim in each case, then En-na-ZU was the grandfather of E-na-Sin. Remembering the habit of naming a child after its grandfather, numerous examples of which may be found, it is possible that these two names are the same and thus ZU would here be written for Sin, but the evidence is slight.

THE CAPPADOCIAN SIGN

It has long been recognized that this sign had the values dī, tī, ti, in Cappadocian, but there has been some question as to whether or not it also had the value din (cf. OLZ, 1925, p. 230). Consequently the names which involve the sign have been variously read, as I-din-A-šīr, I-di-A-šīr, A-šīr-i-din, A-šīr-i-dī, etc. The following facts show that the name element i-, is to be read i-din, doubtless for Assyrian iddin, due to the well known Cappadocian habit of failing to double consonants. The names A-šīr-i-dī-in, E-dī-in-A-šīr, I-dī-in-a-be-im, I-dī-in-Ištar, show that the name element i-din (iddin) was in use. Moreover the same individual's name is sometimes written both ways, e.g. the name of the son of ŠŪ-Ištar, is written I-dī-in-a-be-im (CCT I, 22b:10), and I-din-a-be-im (BIN IV, 197:15); the name of the father of I-din-a-bu-um (evidently another I-din-a-bu-um) is written I-dī-in-Ištar (BIN IV, 61:39), and I-din-Ištar (CCT II, 10:69); the name of one of the writers of the letter CCT IV, 31a is written A-šīr-i-dī-in (line 2) and A-šīr-i-din (line 36). The first and second examples might conceivably be mere coincidences, but this can hardly apply to the third example. The three together sufficiently establish the point. The sign in question is made by the scribes in three or four variant ways, but any of the variants may be used for any of the values dī, din, tī, ti.

THE PREFIX Mâr

THE large number of names of the Cassite period in Babylon which are prefixed by the element TUR or Mâr, "son," is paralleled by a similar phenomenon in the Cappadocian names, with the difference that in the Cappadocian names only the element Mâr, and occasionally Mârat, "daughter," are found, while in the Cassite names many other prefixes are used (cf. CPN, p. 45). Apparently also, the purpose of the prefix is somewhat different from that of the Cassite usage. One is reminded of the Arabic Ibn so often used as a prefix in personal names. Possibly the Cappadocian who bore a name with the prefix Mâr had a name of his own, but for some reason he was better known as the son of his father; he was therefore referred to by his father's name, using the prefix Mâr. The extent to which the element was used in this sense is unique in cuneiform names.

SIGN VALUES PECULIAR TO CAPPADOCIAN

THE system of accentuation used in the name and element lists here presented is that published as Vol. IX—Appendix, Yale Oriental Series, Researches, by C. E. Keiser. There are, however, three sign values in common use in Cappadocian tablets which do not appear in Keiser's list, and for which the writer has adopted an accentuation in accordance with the system of Keiser. The Assyrian form of the signs with their Cappadocian values and the writer's accents are given below.

	šāl.
	dūr.
	dī, tī.

It seems that the sign nī, lī, was sometimes written for NIN; cf. the elements Ni-tī, Ni-ra-aḥ; and possibly Ni-mar is for Nin-mar (cf. ^d*Nin-mar-ki*, DmlPan, p. 216).

CONCLUSION

AN examination of the Name and Element Lists will show the reader that there was a mixture of many races among the people who wrote these documents. A very large percentage of the names are pure Semitic, and an almost equally large number are non-Semitic. Of the Semitic names many are distinctly West Semitic, others are early Babylonian, and still others are Assyrian. It is perhaps not necessary to conclude that because the deity whose name was used more than any other in names was Ashur, that therefore the majority of the names are those of Assyrians. The original home of Ashur may not have been Assyria; both Assyrians and Cappadocians may have adopted his cult from some other source. Among the non-Semitic names there are strong resemblances to Hittite, Subaraean, and even Aryan and Greek names. In such a population there must have been considerable syncretizing of religious cults. The following names may give evidence of such a process: A-šir-ur-ḫi, Ištar-lá-ba, Ḫa-lá-be-im, Ku-bu-lim, Šá-ra-Sin, Zu-na-nim, Zu-ta-A-šir. Eastern Asia Minor may be thought of as an ancient "melting pot" of races. It is a fair conclusion that among these races the Semites dominated. Not only is the language of our documents purely Semitic, but almost without exception the names of persons in official positions are Semitic.

The list here given combines all the names of the published texts, together with collations made by the writer from over 200 unpublished tablets in the Babylonian Collection of James B. Nies at Yale. Names to which any distinguishing mark was found to be added in the text, such as the name of a son, or father, or office are listed as separate individuals. Where no distinguishing mark was given all the references are thrown together, though it is quite evident in many cases that many different individuals with the same name are to be found in one list of references. For example, under the name A-šur-ma-lík, which was a favorite name, there will be found listed 45 different individuals each distinguished in some way, with a correspondingly long list of occurrences of the name in which individuals cannot be separated.

The List of Elements has been arranged according to Semitic roots even though a great number of elements are non-Semitic. One of the chief aims of the list is to index the second and third elements of names for the purpose of study. All comments upon the names have been purposely omitted from the List of Names and reserved for the List of Elements. It is quite possible that some of the non-Semitic names have been wrongly divided, but the effort has been to group those with similar elements.

LIST OF PERSONAL NAMES

Abbreviations: b., brother; d., daughter; f., father; gf., grandfather; gs., grandson; h., husband; s., son; w., wife.

Determinative: ^d, dingir, god.

Feminine names which are known to be such are indicated by f.
